

Las Vegas Review-Journal Selects Amtec Communications As Their New Voice and Data Applications Service Provider

LAS VEGAS — July 15, 2003 — Amtec Communications, an industry leader in telecommunications, announced today that it was selected by the Las Vegas Review-Journal, the largest newspaper distributed by Stephens Media Group, to provide on-going service and maintenance to their voice and data systems. Amtec will also conduct an evaluation of the Review-Journal's current technology in order to maximize efficiency and determine future enhancements.

“After a thorough analysis we chose Amtec because of their high level of service, technical expertise and 2 hour emergency response time,” said Steven Olson, support services manager for the Review-Journal. “It took days for our previous provider to deliver support whenever an issue arose that required immediate attention. In our short experience with Amtec, we’ve learned more about our phone system and its functionality in one week than over the last several years.”

The Review-Journal, which has one of the largest telecommunications systems in the Las Vegas area, utilizes the Mitel SX2000 system and various advanced telephony applications. Amtec will maintain and optimize the system to achieve maximum performance by supporting its more than 1,200 port configuration. The company will service a number of the newspaper's facilities including multiple call centers locations.

“We’re thrilled to provide the level of support for which we are known, to one of Nevada’s most respected companies,” stated Jason Cowles, regional vice president of Amtec Communications.

“Our strong commitment to customer service and dedication to meeting our customers’ needs continues to pay off for us in the marketplace. The type of service Amtec offers is definitely a competitive advantage for us and the companies we serve.”
