LAS VEGAS, NV — August 25, 2003 — Amtec Communications, an industry leader in telecommunications, announced today that it has formed a strategic partnership with ConferTel, a provider of low-cost, enhanced teleconferencing services. The partnership enables Amtec Communications to add additional value to its customers by offering teleconferencing solutions in a cost effective and user-friendly manner.

“With businesses of all sizes focused on cost containment and reduced business travel, teleconferencing is playing an increasingly important role in corporate communications,” said Jason Cowles of Amtec Communications. “We now have the unique ability to give our customers cutting edge teleconferencing solutions at a price that is 30 – 70% below the cost of most major telephone carriers.”

ExpressCall, ConferTel’s most popular product, offers on-demand, reservation- less conferencing that gives businesses the freedom to hold a conference anytime from any location. Users can register on-line to receive a permanent toll-free number and access code and in a matter of minutes they can begin holding meetings from multiple offices. Some of ExpressCall’s features include:

- web and phone-based user controls
- automated email reminders to participants
- moderator controls recording of the call
- call summary via email immediately following each conference

In addition, the company also provides operator-assisted calling for larger or high profile conferences.

“The partnership is a win-win for Amtec Communications and its customers,” stated Leo McGill, vice president and CFO of ConferTel. “Having the ability to provide state-of-the-art teleconferencing services creates a competitive advantage for Amtec Communications and, more importantly, their customers will realize a significant savings to their bottom-line.
